It takes a while, and the first time a few more are added, a second time, and so on, until the system is fully operational. The first time, the system is not operational, and the second time, the system is not operational, and so on.

Un'idea importante, piuttosto generica, in proposito fu data nel 1961 dal professor G. A. K. Scott, che si occupava di ecologia animale, e sosteneva che il rapporto tra la crescita e la riproduzione poteva essere descritto da una curva a S, che si divideva in tre fasi: una di crescita, una di maturazione e una di riproduzione.

Not all individuals in a population are equally successful in the reproductive process. The individuals that are most successful are those that have the highest fitness. Fitness is a measure of an individual's ability to survive and reproduce. It is a relative measure, meaning that it is compared to the fitness of other individuals in the population. Fitness is not a fixed trait; it can change over time as the environment changes. For example, a trait that is advantageous in one environment may be disadvantageous in another. Fitness is a key concept in understanding natural selection and evolution.
